DECLARES STATE MUST BUILD LOCAL BRIDGES

Judge Orvis Files Opinion on Sproul Road Law.

"COUNTY NOT LIABLE"

Lemont Bridge a Test Case and Court Rules That Commonwealth is Responsible for Rebuilding All Bridges on State Highways.

That Centre County cannot be compelled to maintain or build bridges on State highways within the county is the gist of an opinion handed down recently by Judge Orvis. With his opinion was a decree refusing to grant a mandamus on County Commissioners Noll, Grove and Woodring compelling them to repair or rebuild the bridge located on the State highway at Lemont.

The ruling by Judge Orvis is of far-reaching importance in that county is relieved of the duty of repairing the Lemont bridge, which is in an admittedly dangerous condition, or any other bridges located on State highways, and furthermore, the county cannot be held liable for damages resulting from accidents on such bridges. This obligation and responsibility, Judge Orvis holds, falls upon the State as the result of the taking over by the State of roads and highways under the Sproul road law.

The case in question is the first to be tested in Centre County. In Blair County only recently, Judge Baldrige handed down an opinion placing on that county the obligation of maintaining or rebuilding bridges and under that opinion the County Commissioners will proceed with the building of a new bridge. In an eastern county a short time ago a Judge handed down an opinion in which he ruled just as Judge Orvis has done. Conflicting opinions from the courts in various counties are likely to lead to further legislation when the Legislature of 1915 convenes at Harrisburg.

Judge Orvis, in his opinion, emphasizes the dangerous condition of the bridge at Lemont, notes that for a time the burden of maintenance fell upon the county, that subsequently it rested with College Township and that in March, 1911, the road there was taken over by the State under the Sproul law. After quoting various sections of the Sproul law bearing on the question of maintenance, Judge Orvis says:

"Thus it will be seen that highways taken over by the State under the provisions of that particular legislation shall be maintained exclusively by the State, and the township or county formerly liable therefor shall be relieved therefrom. The improvements, maintenance and construction shall be done under the direction and supervision of the State Highway Commissioner, and all such expenditures shall be audited by the Auditor General. It is very clear, therefore, that the state highways form a system quite distinct in its policy from that of any other roads or highways in the Commonwealth, and that it was the intention of the Legislature to impose both the exclusive control over the same, and the burden of constructing and maintaining the same upon the Commonwealth, and to entirely relieve the former municipalities, such as the county or township, from any such liability, and this policy is necessarily the proper one. Therefore, so important a part of such highways as a bridge is and ought to be under the control of the State, its engineers and experts, unless such bridge is clearly made an exception.

Judge Orvis then discusses the Sproul law and holds that bridge maintenance is not excepted, and should not be, pointing out that if bridge maintenance, construction of drainways, etc. were to be excepted the vast sums of money appropriated for highways "would be literally thrown away." He concludes with the explanation that for the safety of travelers he would be very glad to order a new bridge built at Lemont by the county, but that as he reads the Sproul law "the county cannot be compelled to build bridges such as this upon State highways." The request for the mandamus is accordingly refused and the costs placed on the county.

Judge Orvis handed down two other opinions and decrees. In the case of College Township vs. Thomas M. Fishburn, a rule for a new trial and a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict were denied and the court directed that judgment be entered upon the verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant. The decree winds up considerable litigation resulting from the death

COUNCIL IN SESSION

Number of Routine Matters Disposed of at Monday Night's Meeting.

Bellefonte borough Council held a rather busy meeting on Monday night, D. Paul Fortney, as counsel for W. A. Ishler, water tax collector, and who is ill, appeared before Council and asked for instruction in regard to unpaid water rentals for several properties. On the properties in question there is due $30 for 1912 and $157.75 for 1913. The tenants claim that they have paid the water rentals to the property owner and contend that under the circumstances they cannot be deprived of water. The matter was referred to the Water Committee and the Borough Solicitor.

Levi Symmonds filed a written application for appointment as a policeman in the event of a vacancy being created. Policeman Jacob Kniesly recently secured a leave of absence for two weeks and at present he is serving as a guard at the new penitentiary. If he likes it he wants to continue in his new position, which pays a better salary. George Eberhart is serving temporarily as Policeman Kniesly's successor.

The Street Committee reported repairs to a number of streets. The Finance Committee reported a balance in the treasury of $502.12, also that a settlement had been made with the Bush estate for street paving, on a basis of $899.64, and this was approved by Council. The Fire & Police Committee reported a slight blaze Sunday noon at the Charles McCoy home in the Beaver-Hoy row. Councilman Naginew filed complaint against the stringing of naked electric cables by the State-Centre Electric Co. The attention of Council was called to the blocking of traffic by the Pennsylvania Railroad nearby the passenger station. W. T. Kelly, for the company, said that any request by Council would be complied with. The matter was referred to the Street Committee and the Borough Solicitor.

A. Miles Barr was appointed an auditor for the Prisoner Orphanage. Council ordered drawn a note for $884 and one for $1,800, each six months, and one for $1,100, for one year, to lift notes for like amounts and expiring during the present week.

MISARASCH GETS YEAR

Term in Penitentiary for Causing Death of Little Annie Duke.

John Misarasch, recently convicted for the second time for shooting and killing little Annie Duke, at Cato, was on Tuesday morning sentenced by Judge Orvis to a term of one year in the western penitentiary.

Prothonotary Foreman later in the day made out the commitment papers and Misarasch was taken to Pittsburgh to begin his term.

Another Prisoner Skips.

William Krepps, alias W. M. Krapp, a convict completing his term at the new penitentiary, last Sunday skipped out for parts unknown, and the police throughout the State have been notified to be on the lookout for him. The man, who was doing time on an ugly charge, was sentenced from Washington County on May 18, 1912, to a term of not less than two years and six months. His former residences were Washington, Pa., and Upland, Indiana. At the time of his escape he wore black trousers, bluish cap and a blue and white striped shirt. He is 36 years old, 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighs 142 pounds, of medium build, greenish slate eyes, dark brown hair turning gray, medium dark complexion, a glassworker by occupation. A reward of $50 is offered for his capture. Wire all communications to John Francis, Warden, Western Penitentiary, Pittsburgh, Pa.

In the annual commencement game last Saturday Bellefonte High School defeated State College High, 10-3, thus closing a most successful season for Coach Gilligan's team.

of a horse owned by Morris Bohn, of College Township. The horse was injured by a barbed wire hanging alongside the road. He brought suit against College Township and got a verdict. The verdict was for $200, but this was reduced to $148 by a compromise arrangement. College Township paid this amount to Bohn and then brought suit to recover from Thomas M. Fishburn, at whose place the accident to the horse happened. College Township was awarded a verdict of $148 against Fishburn, and the latter, through counsel, filed a rule for a new trial and also a motion to have the judgment stricken off. As noted, both requests were refused by the court.

In another opinion and decree Judge Orvis over-ruled all exceptions to the Auditor's report and confirms the said report in the matter of the assigned estate of Ervin A. Barges, of Haines Township.

WANT A MONSTER TROUT? JUST TRY HAM AS BAIT

Robert Thompson Got One Almost as Big as Himself.

SAYS THE HAM DID IT

Land's Trout of Rainbow Variety Measuring Nearly 26 Inches—Largest Caught Here This Season—His Method New and Novel.

If you want to catch a 25½ inch, one weighing 5½ pounds, and belonging to the rainbow variety, we'll let you in on how to do it. Robert Thompson, son of Claude Thompson, the engineer, and a young man not much larger in stature than the dimensions of the aforesaid trout, put us wise. He not only knows how, but goes ahead and does it. That's why we're putting you on.

Step into Lew Gettig's butcher shop any evening and buy a chunk of ham—old-fashioned, salt-cured ham, the kind that makes your mouth water when the breakfast is sizzling on the kitchen stove. Next morning, without waiting for breakfast, say about 4 o'clock, hike down to Spring creek, along where the trestle runs up from the Central Railroad to the Bellefonte furnace. Bait your hook with a small piece of ham and go to it. Mr. (or Mrs.) trout, 25½ inches long and weighing 5½ pounds, will step up, grab the ham and the prize is yours. Now you have learned the secret. Having caught the trout you lig it like a bag of wheat up to Beezer's garage, toss it into a tub of water and everybody in town comes around to see it, asks you how you did it, tells you it's a dandy, and wonders if there are any more at home like the one that went astray on a ham spree.

Robert Thompson falls somewhat short of being a six-footer, but he is some fisherman and with ideas all his own. The one and all-important thing about his fishing is that he gets the fish. For several days he kept an eye on a monster trout that had been frightening little boys and girls from the Beaver-Hoy row. Various and tempting morsels he tried out on the speckled beauty, but it was not until he worked the ham treatment that the big trout was lured to ruin. Bright and early Tuesday morning Robert drilled down Spring creek, his hook baited with the ham and a broad grin over his face. He had a "hunch" that it was "good night" for the big trout. It was only a minute or two until the trout sighted the ham. There was a rush and the ham disappeared from view. While it lasted the fight was a hummer, but the odds were all Thompson's way. The trout tasted the ham and liked it so well that it wouldn't let go. Thompson gave a sharp yank, drawing the ham toward him. The trout stayed with the ham and the result was that the 25½ inch beauty was soon on the road to the tub at the Beezer garage. It was the largest trout caught here this season.

Sliced ham, suitable for bait, or breakfast at home, is quoted at 30c per pound.

TO TEACH COOKING

Freshman Girls in High School to Receive Expert Training.

The Bellefonte School Board at a meeting held on Tuesday evening formally decided to establish a course in cooking for girls of the freshman class at the High School and the new department will be under way with the opening of school in the fall. The offer of Mrs. John I. Olewine to furnish free a range and other utensils was accepted. The class in cooking will be directed by a member of the senior class at The Pennsylvania State College, the cooking course being under the supervision of Miss Lovejoy and Miss Parry. Donations toward fully equipping the new department will be received from the Daughters of the American Revolution, the W. C. T. U. and the Civic Club.

The School Board elected H. L. Tompkins, of Waynesboro, Pa., to the position of manual training instructor, and Miss Gertrude Greiner, of State College, as commercial teacher. Miss Alice Lowry was elected teacher of the fourth grade, succeeding Miss Catherine Willard. Miss Gertrude Taylor was promoted to the position of teacher of English, succeeding Miss Harrison, resigned. The vacancy created by the promotion of Miss Taylor remains to be filled. All other teachers were re-elected.

Don't Miss It.

"The Belle", the annual publication of the Graduating Class of the Bellefonte High School, will be on sale Wednesday morning, June 10th. It is breezy and chatty and throws the searchlight on the serious and humorous sides of school days.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS CLOSE IN BLAZE OF GLORY

Commencement Week Activities Pleasing Success.

41 TO GET DIPLOMAS

Graduating Class in Exercises at High School Today—Reception and Dance Tomorrow Night—Grade Schools in Pretty Display.

Commencement exercises marked the closing of the Bellefonte public schools this week. Exercises of one kind or another featured the closing days for all grades, those for the High School graduating class of course leading in popular interest. The program for the High School graduates had its initial card on Sunday evening with the preaching of the Baccalaureate sermon by Rev. Dr. G. E. Hawes in the Presbyterian church. The forty-one graduates, in their caps and gowns, presented an attractive appearance. Monday evening was given over to the Junior Declamatory Contest—always an interesting feature of commencement week, and a large and appreciative audience greeted the several participants, who were the following: Henrietta C. Ogilley, Gilbert G. Mattern, Ida Brandman, Allan H. Hoy, Eleanor M. Weston, Herbert G. Williams, Ermintrude C. E. Bricker, William S. Schmidt, Laura J. Cruise and Francis P. Van Vane. First prize was awarded to Miss Weston, whose subject was "The Little Boy They Turned Away." Miss Cruise received the second prize with her subject, "The Boat Race." The judges were Robert M. Beach, of Bellefonte, and Clarence O. Harris and Arthur L. Eno, of State College.

Today the exercises of the graduating class are held at the High school building. The valedictory is by Miss Nancy Corl Hunter, who was awarded the highest honors, the subject of her essay being, "Prophecies Fulfilled." The salutatory is by Miss Eleanor Schofield Parker, who won second honors, and her subject is "The Modern Woman." Other participants are: Fred Alfred Kaup, "Choosing an Occupation"; Paul Miller Gentzel, "Pennsylvania's Coat of Arms"; Catherine Humes Allison, Class History; Ruth Altenderfer, biographical essay, "Helen Hunt Jackson"; Roy Myers, "Pickett's Charge at Gettysburg"; Henry Harrison Lowry, "Robespierre"; Marguerite Lambert, Class Prophecy; Russell Freeman Whiting, "The Old and New Civilization."

Tonight the commencement address will be delivered by Rev. Dr. Frank Pierrepont Graves, of the University of Pennsylvania, following which will be the presentation of diplomas and the awarding of prizes by Dr. M. J. Locke, president of the Board of Directors. Prize winners are the following: Nancy Corl Hunter, for general excellence; Ruth Altenderfer, for the best biographical essay; Catherine Allison and Fred Alfred Kaup, for history, two $5 prizes offered by the D. A. R.; Henry Harrison Lowry, for mathematics; Nancy Corl Hunter, first prize of $5 offered by Mrs. T. R. Hayes for first honors, and $2.50 to each of the following having a grade of 90 or over: Ruth Altenderfer, Catherine Allison, Eleanor Schofield Parker and Sarah Elizabeth Wetzel. The G. R. Meek news article prize has not been awarded.

Tomorrow night the festivities of commencement week will come to a close with the alumni dance and reception in the High School auditorium. Ceder will cater.

The exercises of the grade schools were held on Tuesday for the new building and Wednesday for the brick building. At the former the children presented a cantata entitled "Cinderella in Flower Land," and three folk dances, the first grade school appearing in the "Merry-go-round", the fourth grade in "The Cabbage Patch", and the fifth grade in "I see you." In the cantata Eleanor Bower was the "princess", Herbert Beezer the "Prince", Gerald Davis as "Robin Hood", a courtier, and William Keller as "Bonnie Bee", a page. The little girls of the first grade were "Butterflies" and the boys were "Sunbeams." The second grade boys were "Rain drops", and the girls of the several grades to the sixth were "Fairies", the seventh and eighth grade being "Blossoms" in a chorus, "Little Miss June."

Certificates for general excellence were awarded as follows: Mary Shoemaker, first grade; Elizabeth Hunter, second grade, with honorable mention for William Keller; Mabel Gross, third grade.

So far as known there has been no change in the program as recently published in "The Republican." Governor Tener has fully recovered from his recent injury and will be on hand to deliver the commencement address on Wednesday, June 10th.

TO PLAY CHINESE

Two Baseball Games Next Week—Pittsburgh Here Tomorrow.

A baseball game which should and no doubt will attract every fan to the new Hughes athletic field will be played to-morrow afternoon, at 3 o'clock, between the Academy and the University of Pittsburgh teams. Pittsburgh is playing remarkably fast baseball this season and expects to win, but at that the Academy may produce a surprise for the visitors. The game will be one of the few remaining to be played on the home grounds, and a large crowd should be on hand to boost things for the Academy boys. Pittsburgh is stopping over en route to Penn State. Several former Academy boys are playing on the Pittsburgh club and their old friends here will be anxious to observe the development they have made since stepping into college baseball. Next week, on Wednesday and Thursday, come the two greatest games of the season on the local grounds, for on those days the Chinese University of Hawaii team will be here to cross bats with the Academy. Everybody who witnessed last year's game between the Academy and the Chinese players will want to take in both games this year. Just as they did last year, the Chinese players are cleaning up everything in their route this year. The strongest teams in all parts of the country have gone down to defeat before them, and while the chances are naturally against the Academy the local team will render a good account for itself. Both games will be played on the new Hughes athletic field, on East Bishop Street. It should be explained that the Academy team will be strengthened at several points for the two Chinese games. This will be done with the knowledge and approval of the manager of the visiting team, the idea of Professor Hughes being to give the people the very best games possible. Symmes may pitch one of the games for the Academy. Bloyd will likely be in left field. Two or three Juniata College players also will be secured, so that the Academy team will be stronger than at any time this season. Each game will be called at 3 o'clock.

GUESTS IN MOTOR CARS MAY RECOVER DAMAGES

Owner of Machine Lost Suit Against Penna. Railroad.

HOW AUTO LAWS APPLY

Damage Suit in Centre County Courts Revealing Operation of Laws Important as Guide to Owners and Drivers of Automobiles.

The rapidly growing use of automobiles served to give particular interest in and importance to a damage suit tried last week in the Centre County courts. The suit brought to the notice of owners and drivers of machines how they are affected by existing laws. One interesting feature developed was that a guest in an automobile, who does not know of the existence of a railroad crossing, or who does not observe impending danger in time to warn the driver, may in the event of a collision bring suit and recover damages from the railroad company. If the owner of the car is driving the same and is injured in a collision at a railroad crossing he cannot recover damages. In his case it is held that the accident could not have occurred had he complied with the railroad crossing danger warning to "stop, look and listen." Another point brought out is that the owner of a car is responsible for the acts of the chauffeur.

The suit tried last week was that of Craig S. Rhoads and Josephine L. Rhoads, his wife, in right of Craig S. Rhoads and Josephine L. Rhoads in her own right vs. Penna. Railroad Co. Action in trespass.

Grace R. Kephart vs. same. Action in trespass.

Henry Doerr vs. same. Action in trespass.

By agreement of counsel the testimony in these three cases was taken, as it was largely the same in each case, at the same time. The first two cases to be submitted to the jury by argument and charge of the Court, and after the jury had passed on them the last mentioned case to come up for argument and charge of the Court before the same jury. The cases were put on trial on Tuesday. They resulted from the automobile accident on the 2nd day of July last on the public road crossing of the defendant railroad company between the Milesburg station and the railroad bridge crossing Bald Eagle creek.

The plaintiff's testimony was to the effect that they had been guests of Doerr and had left Altoona on the morning of said day at about seven o'clock to go to Howard and bring back to Altoona Mr. Doerr's niece, who had been visiting at Howard. That they came to point of accident at about 9:30 in the morning, that they had not observed that there was a railroad crossing at this point until they were about 35 or 40 feet from the crossing when they noticed the train on the railroad bridge heading towards Milesburg, and that the driver, Mr. Doerr, did everything he could to stop the car, and that he did succeed in stopping it as it got to the near rail of the railroad track, and that the first coach passed them and the second coach passed until it got to the rear end when something caught their automobile and threw them into a culvert about eight feet deep. They had not noticed the railroad sign on account of foliage. In being thrown into the culvert Mrs. Rhoads had her ankle sprained, hip bruised and a gash in the head, she said she did not regain consciousness until on the train on the way to Bellefonte, and that the auto was run with due care. Miss Kephart received bruises and shock and a broken collar bone, while Mr. Doerr had received bruises on his limbs and chest.

The testimony of the defendant was to the effect that the train had given warning by a steam whistle at the usual whistling point, as well as the air whistle on the rear of the train. One witness testified that the automobile had hit the centre or middle of the centre coach, while the majority of the witnesses testified that the automobile had struck the first truck of the second coach and was thrown into the culvert, and that after the accident the four occupants of the car were brought to Bellefonte and received medical attention. These three actions were brought to recover for the medical attention and expenses and in the last mentioned case, that of Doerr, in addition to the medical expenses, etc., the damage to the automobile. On Friday morning the first two cases were submitted to the jury, who brought in a verdict on Saturday morning in favor of Mrs. Rhoads for $539.33, and in favor of Miss Kephart for $765, after which the Essay by Feba Krepps.

"The Republican" last week noted the prize essay contest held recently by the Bellefonte W. C. T. U. and also explained that the essay written and read by Miss Feba Krepps would be published in this week's issue. It is a matter of sincere regret that we are unable to publish all of the essays submitted to us from various sections of the county. In many instances the manuscripts are so lengthy as to preclude publication. Where manuscripts are returned without having been published we trust the writers will appreciate that the merit of the articles is never questioned and that failure to reproduce the interesting essays in our columns is due wholly to the reason as explained above. The essay by Miss Krepps follows:

ALCOHOL AND CRIME.

From the medical and scientific point of view, we have the great fact before us, that the first thing alcohol does in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred is to affect the mental working of the brain of the man who in any way uses it. Alcohol is not a stimulant. It diminishes the rapidity of thought, makes the imagination and power of reflection commonplace and deprived of originality, acts upon fine and complex sensations by transforming them into coarse and elementary ones; provokes outbursts of evil passions and dispositions, and in this way predisposes men to strife and crime, and upsets habits of work and perseverance.

Within half a century research and experience have pointed out the errors of the past theories, and now it has proven beyond question that alcohol is simply a narcotic and depressant in its effects; that it has no stimulant or tonic properties, and that as a beverage it has no claim or reason for existence.

Several instances of well known men who have been killed or mortally wounded in some way by liquor are given as follows:

Reverend George C. Haddock was murdered in cold blood at Sioux City, Iowa, on the night of August 3, 1886, by a brewer and his confederates. The cause of this was that the liquor men had openly defied and willfully violated the law, and Haddock signed complaints and gave testimony against them.

Another instance was given when United States Senator Edward G. Carmack was assassinated on Monday, November 9, 1908. He was shot down in one of the streets of Nashville, because of his fearless and persistent fight for civic righteousness against the municipal corruption, and especially because of his leadership in behalf of Prohibition in the state of Tennessee. It had not been for the liquor, which is the cause of so much crime, these men would not have been assassinated in cold blood, when working for the good of the country. The wide and accurate scientific investigations lately completed by the Committee of Fifty proves beyond a doubt that alcohol not only wrecks the mind and body of thousands yearly, but also destroys character. The facts which they collected relate to 13,402 convicts in state prisons and state reformatories in various portions of the United States. The first cause of crime in 4,000 of these was alcohol. Intemperance in over 6,000 cases was one of the important causes of crime.

Police records show that over 1,000 people are arrested every day in this country for drunkenness. No other offense results in so many arrests. In fact, drunkenness directly or indirectly results in more arrests in cities with licensed saloons than all other crimes combined. In one year there were arrested for drunkenness in Boston 24,000 persons, in Chicago 31,164, in Philadelphia 24,551, and in New York 31,534.

In a single year, 40,000 persons in our own country go down to a drunkard's grave. Away with the idea that moral suasion would prevent all this. How much moral suasion do you believe would have been necessary to have prevailed with the lamented physician of a town nearby, whose appetite for spirits was so strong that when he saw rum for sale, in defiance of the temperance law, upon the observance of which law he hung all his hopes, he exclaimed, "My God, there is no help for me," and taking his pistol, blew his brains out in his study. How much moral suasion do you believe would have been necessary to have prevailed with that liquor seller, who, when urged by the physician, never to sell him any more, replied, "Damn you, I will sell to whom I have a mind to and as much as I have a mind to."

Mr. Lloyd Garrison made the remark that, "great as is my detestation of slavery, I would rather be a slave seller, than a kidnapper on the African coast, yes, sell this poisonous alcohol to my fellow creatures for use."

Search through the history of this hateful thing, and read one page over which some mother can bow her grateful head and thank God for the saloon did for her boy. There is no such respect. All its history is written in tears and blood, with spears of shame, and stains of crime and dark blots of disgrace.

If anybody will take charge of all Boston poverty and crime, which results from drunkenness, the South Congregational Church, will alone take charge of all the rest of the poverty which needs relief in the city of Boston; this shows that a great amount of the crime done in that city is due to alcoholic liquor.

Carroll D. Wright, former Commissioner of Labor, is said to have looked into a thousand homes of the working people of Europe, and a great many in this country, and in every case so far as this observation goes, drunkenness was at the bottom of the misery, and not the industrial surroundings of the men and their families.

Ex-Senator Wm. P. Frye, of Maine, in a letter to Chicago wrote "Twenty-five years ago, poverty, crime, sufferings and ignorance prevailed; our jails were full, our farm yards empty; the landlord rich, his neighbors for miles around poor, his house well painted, glazed and blinded, and full of comfort; their unpainted, the windows stuffed with rags, the rooms full of nothing but sorrow."

If a brewery is closed down in its place springs up a factory. If a saloon is closed, in its place comes a store. It is simply a process well known to union men, the same process as follows the introduction of machinery. It is a readjustment, a changed condition of society. Almost every disturbance can be traced back to some connection with the saloon. If the workers could solve the problem of the drink traffic, they could put an end to all the social troubles behind it.

A universal cry of despair rises from the whole nation or universe, at the sight of alcoholism. This invasion of alcoholism ought to be regarded by everyone as a public danger, and the principal that the future of the world will be in the hands of the temperate ought to be inculcated into the masses as a truth that is indisputable.

DON'T BE MISLED

Bellefonte Citizens Should Read and Heed This Advice.

Kidney trouble is dangerous and often fatal.

Don't experiment with something new and untried.

Use a tested kidney remedy.

Begin with Doan's Kidney Pills.

A Bellefonte citizen's statement forms convincing proof.

It's local testimony—it can be investigated.

Mrs. Elizabeth Shultz, 118 W. Lamb St., Bellefonte says: "One of the family strained his back while unloading a car some years ago and he was down in bed, unable to do anything. He had such severe pains across the small of his back that he often cried. He had dizzy spells and often everything turned black before him. We knew that Doan's Kidney Pills were the best thing for disordered kidneys and we got a box for him at Green's Pharmacy Co. Before he had taken all of them, he was cured."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Shultz recommends. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Prefer the Phila. Record.

Ask a dozen readers of "The Philadelphia Record" why they prefer it to any other newspaper and you'll get a dozen different answers. It is the favorite of each because it is the strongest in the particular news field which especially interests him. Boil down the answers and you'll find a consensus of opinion that it's a well balanced, all-around newspaper, covering with exceptional fairness and accuracy every field of human activity.

"The Philadelphia Record" rides no hobbies and plays no favorites. It gives all the news for just what it is worth. It steers clear of sensationalism. It is clean and wholesome. Its sporting department is a tower of strength. Its financial reports are authoritative. Producers swear by its market quotations. Its editorial policies command respect and confidence. It's good-natured cartoons imitatively hit off the leading topics of the day. Good judges deem De Mar the best cartoonist in the country.

The same reasons which make the daily issue of "The Philadelphia Record" a favorite have popularized the Sunday issue. "The Sunday Record" includes, besides the usual daily features, a live Magazine Section devoted to women's interests, science and invention, the entertainment of the little folks, special articles of news interest, and humor. There is also a four-page section of colored comics and a weekly fiction magazine.

The daily issue and the Sunday issue of "The Philadelphia Record", appealing as they do to every member of the family, are leaders in their respective fields, and deserve the popularity they have achieved.

...A... Revelation

It Came After a Very Unpleasant Experience

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

I was brought up with Agnes Atherton as my girl chum, for I believe that boys may have girl chums as well as boys chums. When we arrived at an age at which the sexes mate there was no change between Agnes and me from friendship to love.

This state of affairs continued between us until I became smitten with Lillian Gray, and the first person—the only person, in fact—to whom I confided the matter was Agnes.

When I told her of it I noticed a slight contraction of the muscles of the face.

"You don't approve?" I said.

"I neither approve nor disapprove," she replied.

"A choice made by one in love is a love choice, not the result of judgment. You have, I dare say, chosen through love, and even if I knew Lillian Gray well enough to make a judgment choice for you it would avail nothing, for you would not think of abiding by it. Indeed, I would not expect you to abide by it."

"Nevertheless I perceive that you are not especially pleased with the girl who has charmed me."

"Nor displeased with her. You have not asked me to pick out a wife for you."

"If I had you would not have picked out Lillian."

"There is nothing to her discredit in that. Suppose I should fall in love with a man, then ask you to pick out a husband for me. Do you suppose you would select the man I had chosen?"

"No, I wouldn't," I snapped.

I could not define even now exactly what it was in her question that caused me irritation. I supposed at the time I was irritated because Agnes did not show any enthusiasm over my sweetheart. My words ended the discussion, and we proceeded to other subjects.

The withholding of Agnes' approval—or disapproval, for that matter—caused me to defer a proposal of marriage for some time to the girl who had enthralled me. I did not relish marrying any girl over whom my chum was not enthusiastic. Indeed, I would have liked Agnes to love her as well as I.

In a subsequent conversation with Agnes on the subject after I had become engaged to Lillian I told her this, and her reply was that there was no more reason why she should love any particular girl because I loved her than that I should love any particular man because she loved him.

"That's all bosh," I exclaimed. "Men don't love men."

This was the second time that I was irritated at a remark of Agnes concerning my affair, and a second time it ended a discussion of the subject.

Another matter troubled me. I was not approved by Lillian's parents. But there was an especial reason for this. They wished their daughter to marry a wealthy man. I was doing pretty well and had some prospects, but that did not satisfy Mr. and Mrs. Gray. Their aim for Lillian was an establishment. She had an excellent position in society, which they desired her to keep up after marriage, and they were well aware that this would require a fortune independent of anything they could give her.

I did not blame Lillian for being distressed at their opposition. A very strong love for me on her part was required to induce her to give up a life to which she had always been accustomed, in opposition to her parents' wishes. I saw plainly that a struggle was going on within her, and after deliberation I offered to release her. She declined to be released. I told her that if she felt a reluctance to leave the gay world she would serve her own interests as well as mine by accepting a release, for no couple could be happy together when one was pining for the unattainable. She replied that she could not and would not give me up.

But the matter dragged. Her parents would not give their consent to our marriage, and since Lillian did not like to marry me without it there seemed to be no prospect of any outcome. At last I told her that she must do one thing or the other, either marry me or break with me, and after much deliberation, in which I detected as much unwillingness to give up the fashionable world as to act contrary to the wishes of her parents, she decided to marry me. But she stipulated that our wedding must be without the knowledge of her parents. We would go to a clergyman, be married; she would return to her home, confess what she had done and secure forgiveness, after which we would live together as man and wife.

I did not like this plan at all. I urged Lillian to do nothing secretly. She replied that she knew her parents better than I and could better judge what course was best to pursue with them. I told her that anything clandestine was foreign to my nature and frankly confessed that I would prefer to give her up than act unethically. She burst into tears. Every one knows what woman's tears will do with a man. Smiles will draw him to the edge of a moral precipice; tears will drag him over.

One afternoon I called with my car on Lillian, ostensibly to take her for a drive, really to go with her to a clergyman and be married. She had confided her intention to a bosom friend of hers, a Bessie Angell, and desired that she be present at the ceremony. She claimed that there should be witnesses, so I asked my friend Arnold Brown to be of the party. These two were to meet us at the parsonage.

Lillian was trembling when she entered the car. On the way she said nothing to me, and when I spoke to her she replied by monosyllables. I realized that she was not in a condition of sufficient equanimity to take the most important step in a woman's life.

"There is yet time," I said, "to retreat from this step."

"No," she replied faintly. "I am going through with it."

I was half minded to stop the matter where it was, but when we were half minded we are as liable to decide wrong as right. I drove on to the parsonage and pulled up before the door.

"Go in," she said, "and see if they are all there; then come back for me."

"Haven't you better go in with me?" I asked.

"No; I won't be married without Bessie."

Always persuaded to what I did not approve of, I went to the front door, rang the bell and was admitted. I found Arnold Brown waiting for me, but no Bessie Angell. Stepping to the telephone, I called up her home and asked for her. She came to the telephone, and I asked her why she was not at the parsonage. She replied that she had not been certain from what Lillian had said to her when they had last met whether the wedding would come off or not. To this I expressed surprise. After a dialogue, very unsatisfactory to me, it was agreed that she should hold the wire while I went out to Lillian, and if I returned with a request from her friend to come to the parsonage she would come at once. Setting down the receiver, I ran out to the car.

It was where I had left it, but no Lillian.

My heart went down like lead. I looked in every direction, though not expecting to see her. Flight was a fitting climax to the vacillation she had shown. I stood on the steps, wondering what to do.

When we are in a hole we naturally turn to something or someone to pull us out. I thought of Agnes Atherton. My own judgment had been led so far astray by Lillian that I could not at once get it in working order. I didn't know what to do about Arnold Brown. I shrank from telling him I had been left in the lurch by one I was about to make my life partner. Returning to him, I said:

"Arnold, there is a hitch; wait here till I straighten it out."

He saw that I was flurried and told me to go slow; he would wait for me there till the crack of doom. Hurrying out, I drove to Agnes' home, and fortunately I found her there.

I told her the whole story.

I had thrown myself on a sofa, and she sat down beside me, taking my hand in hers soothingly.

"It seems to me," she said, "that there is nothing for you to do but tell the truth to your friend, Mr. Brown, and that will end the matter."

"I dare say you're right, but I would rather do a six months' term in state prison than confess to him that I have been such a fool."

I stopped short, and for a few moments there was silence between us, at the end of which Agnes asked:

"Has Mr. Brown ever seen—"

"Lillian? No."

"I'll tell you what I'll do for you. You seem all cut up, and I would like to help you out. My law of action is the intent. I will go with you to the parsonage, marry you, and we will have the marriage annulled at our leisure."

Never in so short a space of time was a revelation made to any human being. Here was a woman, worthy of the devotion of the best man living, whom I had turned down for the weakest. It all came upon me with sledgehammer force. Claspings Agnes in my arms, I said:

"It will never be annulled with my consent."

Hastening to a phone, I called up the parsonage, got Arnold and said:

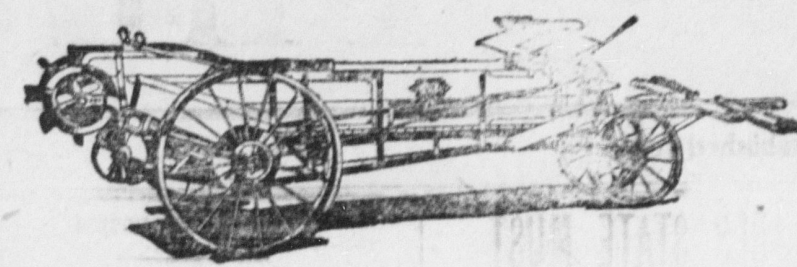

"The tangle is unraveled. I and the bride will be with you presently."

In less than half an hour Agnes and I were in the parsonage. I introduced her to Brown; then the clergyman was called from his study and performed the wedding ceremony, neither he nor the single witness suspecting that in a twinkling there had been a change in the bride.

After the ceremony there were still several hours before the end of the day, and I drove my wife into the country. What passed between us could not be condensed within a few words. I would not care to give it if it were possible. We settled our mutual affairs to the satisfaction of both. Agnes' confessing before our return that when I told her of my engagement I gave her a shock since she had always wished me for herself. And so it turned out that instead of getting a girl who was not worthy of me I got one of whom I was not worthy. We arranged our affairs so that no one would be shocked at the hastiness of our marriage and in due time appeared before the world as man and wife.

Lillian Gray was married to a very wealthy man. Whether or not she regrets me I don't know, but I doubt if she realized the weakness she displayed in her relations with me. Agnes says that Lillian is so wrapped up in the world of fashion that she doesn't look upon her shift with me as a serious mistake from a very foolish girl's move that would have cost her a hundred dollars.

INTERNATIONAL Harvester manure spreaders have a score of good features in their construction. Each one is the result of careful field experiment.

An IHC spreader is low enough for easy loading, yet it has plenty of clearance underneath. The rear axle is well under the load, rear wheels have wide rims and Z-shaped lugs, insuring good traction under all conditions. Frame, wheels, and all driving parts are of steel. Apron tension is adjusted by a simple device. Winding of the beater is prevented by large diameter, and beater teeth are strong, square and chisel-pointed.

International manure spreaders are built in several styles and sizes, low or high, endless or return apron, for small farms or large. Examination will show sturdiness of construction in every detail. Repairs, if ever needed, may always be had of the local dealer.

Examine International spreaders at the dealer's. We will tell you who sells them, and we will send you interesting catalogues.

TRAGIC BRAVERY.

Sublime Act of a Hero Who Went to a Watery Grave.

In the chapel at Glenalmond school in Perthshire, Scotland, there is a marble slab with this stirring story recorded upon it:

There was once in the school a pupil named Alexander Cumine Russell, who became an officer in the Seventy-fourth highlanders when only a lad of seventeen. In connection with the memorable loss of the Birkenhead he won immortal glory. The troopship struck upon a rock; the soldiers were formed in ranks upon the deck to die; the women and children were being saved in boats.

Russell was ordered into one of the boats to command it, and a little way off he watched with dimmed eyes the doomed ship. When she went down he saw creatures of the deep contending for his beloved comrades. Then he saw a sailor's form rise up close to the boat and a hand strive to grasp the side.

A woman in the craft called out in agony: "Save him! Oh, save him, sir! He is my husband," but there was no room for another, and the boat was laboring heavily as it was. Russell looked at the woman and then at her children, then at those beseeching eyes in the deep, and, rising in the stern, he plunged into the water and helped the sailor into what had been his own place. Then amid a chorus of "God bless you" from every one in the boat the brave young officer turned to meet his death.—Pearson's Weekly.

SOME FAMOUS PAINTINGS.

A Tiny Work of Art and Rosa's Transformed Harpsichord.

The smallest painting in the world of distinctive merit was executed on the smooth side of a grain of corn by a Flemish artist. On this limited surface the artist painted in perfect detail a mill, a miller with a sack of grain on his back, a horse and cart and a group of several peasants standing in a road.

The largest picture ever painted is said to be a panorama of the Mississippi river, executed by John Banvard, an artist who died in Watertown, S. D., in 1891. The gigantic canvas was twenty-two feet high and nearly two miles long. It gave a detailed representation of 2,000 miles of the Father of Waters.

The largest of the old masters' canvases is Murillo's "Appearance of the Christ Child to St. Anthony of Padua." The picture is ten feet wide and eighteen feet high.

It is related that a friend called on Salvador Rosa in Florence one day and found him playing on an old harpsichord. The caller asked the artist why he kept such a worthless instrument.

"Why, it is not worth a scudo," the friend said.

"I will wager," replied Rosa, "that it shall be worth a thousand before you see it again."

A bet was made. Rosa immediately painted a landscape on the lid that not only sold for 1,000 scudi, but was accounted a work of great merit.

Boasted Too Soon.

When the old Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz was staying at Holkham with Thomas Coke, then commonly known as "king of Norfolk," he boasted one evening at dinner that no man had ever dared to shoot at him and that if any one had ever attempted such a thing he would have shot the man dead on the spot.

The next day at the court the grand duke suddenly felt a shower of shot peppering his legs and, turning round in a fury to find whence it proceeded, saw William Coke with a gun leveled in his direction.

"I've got another muzzle ready," said William coolly. "Will you shoot?"

From "The Life of Thomas Coke, Earl of Leicester."

Reincarnated.

The school as a civic center having become overcrowded, it occurred to some bright mind to advocate the use of the home as a civic center.

"The home is vacant so large a part of the day that it would seem that the highest efficiency would put it to some use other than as a possible place to sleep in after midnight."

This was immediately done, and the home began to come back. Thereupon the leading sociological writer wrote an article in which he proved again to the satisfaction of all that everything has a use.—Life.

His Thirst.

Husband—May, just send up some filtered water. Wife—Which was it last night, "Detained at the office" or "A friend at the club?" Husband—Why? Wife—Because I didn't know whether you wanted a tumbler or a palful.—London Opinion.

Improving Slowly.

"How is your cousin getting on, Jane?"

"Nicely, thank you, ma'am, but he had an awful time. They performed three autopsies on him at the hospital before he began to get better."—Baltimore American.

Didn't Agree With Him.

"You should never take anything that doesn't agree with you," the physician told him.

"If I'd always followed that rule, Maria," he remarked to his wife, "where would you be?"—London Express.

Pike's Peak.

Zebulon Montgomery Pike, an officer in the United States army, discovered the famous peak that bears his name on Nov. 19, 1806.

"Watchful waiting" may be all right when the dinner pail is well filled.

Having delivered the "goods" at the recent primaries numerous Democratic aspirants for postoffices are beginning to wonder when the "goods" will be delivered to them.

The Democratic party is now waiting for good crops to bring about good times. Evidently have despaired of good times resulting from the Democratic near-free-trade law.

The explanation that the Panama canal tolls plank got into the Democratic national platform by mistake applies equally well to the promise of higher wages and lower prices.

We are waiting patiently to observe how some Democrats who recently called Palmer and McCormick the meanest kind of names will blossom forth with reasons for supporting those two worthies during the coming campaign.

Congressman Palmer, Democratic nominee for United States Senator, says that times are and have been bad but that they will get better after awhile. Looks as if we will have to wait until Republicans regain control at Washington.

One nice thing about the approaching campaign is that once more we are to hear "Farmer" Cressy predict failure for the Commonwealth unless he is elected to some kind of an office. A campaign without Cressy and his "exposures" would be much like a basket picnic minus the ham sandwiches and hard-boiled eggs.

Married at Lock Haven

Miss Ruth Crouse, of Aaronburg, and Boyd Vonada, of Spring Mills, were married on Tuesday at Lock Haven, the ceremony being performed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Campbell by Rev. A. F. The skill revealed in a basketry, sewing, manual training, etc., elicited the enthusiastic praise of all who inspected the exhibit. The instruction in sewing has been under the supervision of Mrs. John Porter Lyon and Miss Ida Green, assisted by other women of the town. Their services are entirely free, being prompted by their praiseworthy interest in the general welfare of the children.

To Professor Jonas D. Wagner and his corps of able assistants, High School and grades, is due the greatest credit for what has been undoubtedly the most successful commencement week in the history of the Bellefonte schools.

New York.

New York is the most wonderful city in the western hemisphere. It has the tallest office buildings in the world; it has the greatest bridges on the North American continent; it has more hotels than any other city in the world; its Stock Exchange is the greatest in existence; it is the world's greatest seaport; it has the most magnificent railway stations in America; it is the greatest banking center in the country; more popular songs are published in New York than in all other cities combined; it has more Pittsburgh millionaires than Pittsburgh; it has a larger Jewish population than Jerusalem had in its most glorious days, and, according to estimates made by some of our most able estimators, it has a larger number of native New Yorkers than Cohoes, Chicago Record-Herald.

Under a Banyan Tree.

The first parliament house of the Boers was under a banyan tree, under which the rulers of the Transvaal gathered in the early days of the republic to discuss questions affecting the country, and the tree became known as the "first volksraad of the Transvaal." The Boers call the spot Wonderboom. It is a few miles outside of Pretoria, at the entrance to a cleft in the mountain.

THE HONOR MAN

How He Made Good.

By VINGIE E. ROE

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

The great, pine shaggy shoulders of the Cascades reared against the turquoise summer sky. Far down below the turbulent white waters of the Rogue river foamed in their wild bed, and their murmur rose to the mountain crests.

Halfway between the two extremes a fine roadway climbed by steady grades along the giant hills.

Along this road for a matter of a mile were scattered little groups of men still at work upon it. They wore overalls and sauteen shirts, and there was nothing in their appearance to differentiate them from other men, yet they were convicts.

Farther on the pine shanties and tents of the honor camp straggled along the road, hugging it close by reason of the steepness of the hills.

Here there was a cook shack where the life of the camp centered. There was no sign of authority anywhere, and McConnell, the superintendent, went about unarmed as far as any one knew.

A quarter mile from the camp, just below the roadbed, a single man worked alone with pick and shovel deepening a wash from a culvert pipe.

He was about thirty, dark eyed and haired, though the short curls at his temples were dusted with gray. He was slim and agile, with the suggestion of football and the track meet in every line of his body.

He looked out of place as he labored, stopping from time to time to gaze off over the feathery, whispering slopes dropping so swiftly to the river below.

"Heavens," he said aloud—"the good green earth!"

Presently, as he worked, holding his eyes to the prosaic task under his hand with an effort, a girl came along around the bend on the road above him.

"Hello, impostor!" she called in a strong contralto voice that carried splendidly in the clear air.

He straightened and looked up with a smile.

"Not on your life!" he said. "Haven't I told you I'm where I belong?"

"Nix!" said the girl shortly, and, sitting down on the fill, she dropped her length to the sloping surface a little above him, where she sat down, drew up her knees, clasped them in her arms and smiled at him with clear, womanly gray eyes.

"You're an impostor. You're not one of the boys at heart."

"No?" he said courteously at this blunt opening of the tacitly shunned subject of the camp. "You're white as a sheet."

She shook her brown head.

"I know a man," she said simply. "From a criminal."

He smiled a trifle grimly.

"Not in this case," he said. "You don't know what's in my heart."

She did not speak, but under her breath she said to herself sharply:

"Pity I don't!"

She was McConnell's daughter, and her parole was more important than the governor's in the honor camp.

"I might be meditating escape right now," he said, flicking his eyes upward at her face as he bent to his interrupted work again.

"It's a mighty call—a mighty call—that of the open woods and the streams."

He stopped again and looked down over the whispering pine tops to the roaring river.

"To you more than to those others," she said, nodding her head toward the bend ahead which hid the scattered groups, "and a common man might answer it. You are of better fiber."

They both fell silent, while the river roared and the little winds played in the pine tops.

He did not look up again, and she watched his broad shoulders and lithe hips give and take with the motion of the pick for a long time.

Her gray eyes were speculative and very tender, while a tense line of anxiety drew in around her lips. Presently she shifted her position a trifle. As she did so a tiny stone under her foot became dislodged, starting to roll down the sharp decline. Watching, she saw it suddenly disappear in a narrow crack in the worn rock of the hillside.

A moment later there came a tiny thud as it struck bottom, a thud that reverberated with a strangely hollow sound.

The man did not seem to notice it and looked up as she rose after awhile to go on her way.

"Goodby," he said gently, but she did not speak.

At supper time the men came straggling in, some weary and hopeless, others singing, a pathetic file in the high blue shadow of the mountains, and crowded about the basins and the towels.

The girl hung upon the outskirts of the crowd, busy at some task, but covertly watching for the figure that was not like those others.

And she knew—long before her father stood at the cook shack door and checked them off by number as they filed in to the evening meal—she knew.

She did not need the sudden halt in the roll call, the repetition of his number, its iteration, the glances of inquiry, the questions, to tell her that it had happened.

There was sudden confusion. The supper sat untasted on the tables while a search was made of the shacks and tents.

Then there was order, and squads were made up and details given, and she saw a gun suddenly spring into sight on her father's hip.

In ten minutes the honor camp was out on the hillside starting the first man hunt, for this was the first time a man had broken his parole.

The girl ran at her father's side, lithe and strong in her short skirt and trim mountain boots, silent, listening to the buzz of comment and speculation.

Like bloodhounds the squads went first to the wash below the high arched culvert which carried off the most threatening of the big mountain's rushing rivulets in the rains. Here lay his tools, but of himself or the way he had gone there was no sign.

"Skipped," said her father disdainfully, "and him a 'trusty'—the first man to play the infernal fool, for if I mean a long addition to his term when he's caught. And he'll be caught. Now we'll spread out from here."

But here the girl pushed through and stood just over the long crack in the slanting rock. She leaned forward a bit, as if she wished her ringing young voice to carry downward.

"You're wrong, dad!" she cried strongly. "I tell you you're wrong! The man's been a hunter—a fisher. He's the putted, gauntleted, tailored khaki kind, and the pull of the hills and woods has been too strong! He's gone for a time, but he'll come back. The freedom and the wild have waked the old longings in him, and he's fung out to the woods, but he'll come back. I know, for my rifle and my steel fly rod are gone."

"Rosie," said her father gravely, "you've never been a fool before. Go on back to your mother."

Obediently, having fallen contentedly silent, she went, and the squads spread up and down the great watershed in grim and orderly fashion.

When the midnight stars stood overhead there was a tiny, whispering sound at the culvert, and a man came crawling cautiously out of it, having merely raised the mat of drooping ferns that concealed the mouth of as fine a natural underground cavern that gave at the upper end as one might need for such a purpose as his.

Now he straightened cautiously and listened. Far up on the ridge he could hear occasional scattered shouts where his fellows searched for him. He smiled grimly.

His dark eyes were full of fire and grim determination, and the excitement of great hazard marked his clean lined face. He was starting for freedom. But the first careful step appalled him by its consequence. He put his foot on something that rolled and sent him rattling down the wash, while the object of the disaster slid with him.

With his heart stopped still he put out his hands and felt it. It was a steel fishing rod, its joints tied together. Dangling from it he found, as his fingers slipped along it, a reel full of line and a fly book.

It had been placed directly across the culvert's mouth.

With his face a study in the darkness he crept slowly back, reaching with his sensitive hands along the rocky bed. They came upon the cold metal of a gun—a neat, light rifle.

"Lord!" he said under his breath. Then he sat back up on his heels, motionless in the darkness.

The men came straggling back at dawn for food, ate, talked, compared notes and went out again. All day they hunted the hills and the gorges, slept a bit by turns and returned to the search.

McConnell was grim and angry. He hated to send word to the authorities until he had satisfied himself that he could do nothing himself.

The girl watched slyly from her gray eyes and said nothing, though she was as tense as a drawn string.

The next morning they were a haggard bunch that clustered around the long tables in the cook shack, and McConnell stood at the telephone calling for the valley town. He was sending for help.

The voices of the men were hushed for his benefit, and there was only the clatter of knives against heavy plates.

Suddenly there was an exclamation, the rasp of a chair pushed back on the rough floor, and a man sprang up with a tragic finger pointed to a window that commanded the road.

"Heavens!" he cried shrilly. "There he comes!"

In one hand he carried the lengths of a steel rod and a string of trout fresh from the cool shadows of the spray dashed rocks. In the other he bore a light hunting rifle, while on his back, properly slung with the trick of the true hunter, its slender feet tied to his breast and its weight on his shoulders, there rode a young spike buck.

"Good morning!" he smiled. "By George, I'm hungry!"

McConnell walked up to him, and for a long moment the two men looked each other between the eyes with glances sharp as steel. Then:

"Wash up," said the former shortly. "You're just in time."

As he turned to obey his dark eyes traveled to where the girl stood at the far side of the tables with a dish in her hands, and they were full of a smiling light. Her lips were trembling and her lashes wet with tears.

He nodded ever so slightly.

Presently as he washed at the basins she passed him, and her hand rested for a moment on his muscled arm under its torn sleeve with an eloquent caressing touch.

"Man," she laughed tremulously, "oh, man!"

College Essay Contest.

On Wednesday night, May 27, a prohibition essay contest was held by the Prohibition League of Penn State among the college students. The prize was $25 in gold donated by the W. C. T. U. of Bellefonte. The object in giving this prize was to create new interest, and stimulate greater activity on the part of the college man in this great economic question.

Great interest was taken in this contest, and the competition was keen and spirited. The following wrote essays of between 2000 and 3000 words: P. K. Pavildes '14; B. M. Cruse '15; J. D. Gold '15; R. M. Decker '16; E. J. Perry '16; G. W. Miller '17. The judges graded the essays as follows: 1, R. M. Decker '16, 2, P. K. Pavildes '14, 3, B. M. Cruse '15.

Warns Against Cholera Cure.

A despatch from Washington, D. C., says: Evidence of what appears to be a well organized campaign to delude farmers throughout the country into buying an alleged cure for hog cholera, under the impression that this has been investigated and approved by the United States government, has reached the department of agriculture. Articles praising this medicine, benetol by name, are being sent out widespread to newspapers. These articles are so worded that it appears as if the department of agriculture had received reports from the state of Minnesota showing that the medicine had proved most beneficial. As a matter of fact the one report received by the department was an unofficial and unsolicited statement sent presumably from the promoters themselves. The department attaches no importance whatever to this statement. It has no reason to believe in the efficiency of any proprietary cure for hog cholera and does not recommend any. Under certain conditions it urges farmers to protect their stock with anti-hog cholera serum, but that is all.

In connection with this attempt it may be said that the medicine, which is now put forward as good for hogs, was advertised some time ago as a means of killing tuberculosis, typhoid and dancergs, according to an article published in the Journal of the American Medical association. At that time it was asserted that the army was interested in it. As a matter of fact the army was no more interested than the department of agriculture is now.

In view of the evidence that the attempt to create this false impression is persistent and widespread, all hog owners are warned to communicate with the United States authorities before accepting as true any statement that the government recommends any treatment other than the serum already mentioned.

Calf's Freakish Head.

Dr. S. M. Nissley, the veterinarian, one day last week came across a freak in the shape of an abnormally developed calf's head while at the farm of Alexander Hoover, back of Fillmore. The calf was fully developed. It had suffered from dropsy of the brain, and on top of the head was found an enlargement about the size of a man's head. The brain had become abnormally large and in growing had forced out the skull. The calf died before birth. Dr. Nissley removed the head and shipped it to the laboratory of the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, for such use as those in charge might care to make of it. He explained that the case was the first to come to his notice since he left college.

Oodles, the Avenger

He Was Half Witted,
but Faithful

By M. J. PHILLIPS

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

"The New York attorney, he goes tomorrow," said Frederic, the fat French landlord of Pere Chene.

His wife, a thin little woman, with a sharp voice and a heart of gold, blazed into sudden anger.

"He stayed too long, and he goes too soon!" she cried.

Frederic took his pipe from his mouth and turned ponderously.

"You mean—what?" he questioned.

"I mean that our Therese!"

Frederic gazed uncomprehendingly, and she made a gesture of impatience at his stupidity.

"Tch! Can't you see? She likes him too well."

Her husband's mouth sagged open. He held the pipe in his pudgy hand. His black beard rippled over his breast. His eyebrows were raised in amazement and something of dismay. He looked like a wondrously carved statue, for he sat very still.

But one's mouth cannot stay open indefinitely. Frederic's closed reluctantly. He peered into his pipe and drew forth his buckskin tobacco pouch.

"Chut!" he commented.

Mme. Lecoeur ceased her agitated rocking.

"Chut!" she snapped. "Chut! And our only child is breaking her heart. Look for yourself. They are coming."

She inclined her head sideways. Her husband turned in his stout chair, all together, like a piece of machinery, and looked up the one street of the backwoods Michigan town.

It was a pretty sight that Frederic saw—one that appealed to the quick sentimental perceptions of his race.

A man and a girl were coming toward the hotel on the veranda of which they sat. The man was of the city, and his neat, fashionable clothing was in striking contrast to the Mackinaw garb of the few woodsmen who languished in doorways. He was talking eagerly to the girl, who kept pace with him, and his keen young face was alight with the visions of one who is both dreamer and doer.

The girl was a glorious creature, whose roundness was not plumpness and whose slenderness was not thinness. Her luxuriant brown hair was uncovered. She walked in Indian moccasins with the springy ease of a frontiersman.

Her big, dark eyes were turned on young Amidon with flattering attention. In their depths was an unconscious and pitiful revelation of her heart.

They paused a moment by the rude steps.

"We are going down to the falls," said the lawyer. "I want to explain to Miss Therese what our company means to do here. Why, M. Lecoeur, the country above is a natural reservoir. A dam will furnish power to light every town within a hundred miles of here and run the mills besides."

He turned to Therese as he finished as one turns to a friend who comprehends. But there was nothing in his look or his manner but impersonal enthusiasm; no hint that he was conscious of her sex or of her loveliness.

"Your company is rich, M. Amidon?" queried the landlord.

A smile came to the lawyer's boyish face.

"They have barrels of it," he replied.

Mme. Lecoeur turned to her husband when the young people had gone on.

"You see, you see?" she demanded.

"She cannot get enough of looking at him. And he—his head is full of dams and electric lights and mills. Tch-men!"

"My daughter," she continued, "is worthy of any man in the land. She has graduated from the Grayling high school. She can bake and sweep and sew. She is as merry as a robin. She can walk from here to Tahquema in four hours, and it is twenty miles.

"She has taste, too, Frederic—a taste she did not inherit from the Lecoeurs. Faith, no."

"She has the high heeled, small shoes and a gown no bigger around than your trousers leg—great, fat—oaf! She has even been three times to Bay City. She is as innocent and unspooled as a babe. Why does he not see?"

She had spoken rapidly in French. Her husband removed his pipe in order to shake his head slowly.

"I will tell you why he does not see," she said, switching to English to answer her own question. "He has had no time but to bargain and plan and buy the land."

"If he could stay here for two weeks more, with his mind free of business, he could not help loving her. But he will go without seeing or speaking, and it will kill her."

She sighed wishfully. "If he would but fall sick. She is a splendid nurse."

They turned guiltily at a sound behind in the doorway, but at sight of the queer face looking down at them Mme. Lecoeur spoke relievedly. "Oh, Oodles! It is you!"

Oodles Napper was one of "God's innocents," a silent young half wit who roamed the wilderness, flitting here and there as the errand fancy took him. The door of every settler from the straits to Saginaw bay was open to him. No one dreamed of charging him for food and lodging.

But he paid in his own way nevertheless. He was a mighty hunter. He always carried a rifle, and his aim was of the deadliest. Birds and squirrels and deer in season he brought to the homes of his friends.

Now the wide, thin, upturned mouth was doleful; the small blue eyes were dull.

"You heard, Oodles?"

Mme. Lecoeur and all of Pere Chene knew that he loved Therese, as the dog loves his mistress, with a dumb love that asks nothing but the privilege to serve.

The half wit nodded.

"Yes," he murmured. "Sorry—sorry." He looked to the north after Therese and Amidon.

"Where to, Oodles?"

Frederic had noted that he carried rifle and pack.

"Tahquema—south."

Without another word or look he turned toward the blue hills. Soon he disappeared in the scrub at the end of the street.

When the village had been shut off by tag alders and bushes Oodles' long strides shortened. Unconsciously he came to a standstill. He stood for several minutes in an indecision that was painful. His lips moved soundlessly.

Evidently it was a time of intense mental agitation, for the sweat burst out on his forehead, and his hands clinched until the knuckles showed white through the brown skin, and the tendons in his wrists drew like cords.

At last a resolution was reached. Heading west, he began to run swiftly, but with great caution.

He slipped through the brush like a wild thing. His face took on a new expression—queer and terrible.

As he ran he bore to the north in a half circle. Presently he came out on a little knoll, threw himself flat in the long grass and peered between the trunks of a clump of jack pines.

Yes, there they stood on the bank of the river, near the rapids. The lawyer, his face alight, was pointing as he explained the plans of his company to Therese.

The girl was looking up at her companion. Even at that distance the half wit read the unconscious pathos of her attitude.

With swift fierceness he drew the rifle to his shoulder, sighted carefully and fired.

Amidon paused in the midst of his sentence, blank amazement on his face. Then he tottered and fell.

Therese's scream echoed high above the bur of the rapids. The half wit ran away, more like a wild thing than ever.

Therese and her lover, who was also her husband, stood on the porch of the Lecoeur house in the gloaming. Her dark eyes were pools of brooding happiness.

The man, mimicking a shy school-boy, edged over and took her hand. She laughed and leaned against him.

"It's good to be here," he said.

"Do you know what day it is?"

He looked down at her, eyes round with recollection.

"By Jove!" he cried. "It's just a year—a year ago today."

She nodded. They were silent a moment, and then he went on:

"If it hadn't been for that I'd never have discovered how much I cared. I was going away without a word to you. Think of that!"

"But you hadn't finished binding me up before I was crazy about you, and the longer you nursed me the more I loved you."

His arm went round her.

She nestled against him and sighed contentedly.

"The chap who did it was a marksman," he continued. "There I was, gesticulating like Mark Antony, and along comes a bullet and breaks my arm—snip—like that. I wonder who it was?"

"I'd like to know so I could thank him. The fellow did me a good turn."

She shuddered a little.

"I was frightened—at first. But it did come out all right, didn't it?"

"It certainly did," returned Amidon.

"And now let's talk of something more serious. Kiss me," he said severely.

A chuckle came from the doorway behind, and they turned guiltily, like children.

"Oh," said Therese, relieved, "it's only Oodles!"

M. B. Shultz, for some time past book-keeper for the Bellefonte branch of the Lauderbach-Barber Co., on Monday assumed charge as manager of a new branch store opened at Indiana, Pa. The Lauderbach-Barber Co. recently purchased the Indiana Wholesale Grocery Co. store, at Indiana, and converted it into a regular branch concern along the lines of that conducted in Bellefonte. Mr. Shultz had no idea that he was being considered for the post of manager until he received notice to report at Indiana ready to take charge on Monday. His many friends here are confident that he will meet with the greatest success in his new field. Miss Ethel Flack has been engaged as stenographer for the Bellefonte plant. It is likely that the staff will be shaped up to enable Manager J. Howard North to devote more time to the office. Heretofore he has been devoting a part of each week to traveling over the territory covered by the local store.

The Bellefonte Academy baseball team lost a heart-breaking game to Juniata College last Saturday afternoon, 7-0. It seemed that all the "breaks" in the game favored Juniata, and as a consequence the Academy lost out. The local boys offered no complaints, realizing that now and then the "breaks" favor them and contribute to victories. For five innings the Academy and Juniata played the closest kind of a game, Juniata at that stage leading, 1-0. In the sixth came the lucky turns for Juniata. The first man up bunted directly down the line to first. Kennedy, who pitched for the Academy, raced with the ball but hesitated to touch it, trusting to it going foul. The next man up bunted directly down the line to third. This time Kennedy made a grab for the ball but juggled it until too late to nab the runner to second. Juniata got three men on bases and the next man up cracked out a three-bagger. That started the hitting and when the side was finally out the score had been pushed up to 7-0. The game proved to be one of the most interesting in which the Academy has played this season.

While services in the several Bellefonte churches were under way last Sunday morning the fire alarm sounded, causing more or less apprehension. The blaze was at the Charles McCoy home, in the Beaver-Hoy row, and fortunately did little damage. The firemen responded promptly. Rev. John Hewitt has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Good Shepherd Protestant Episcopal church, at Raleigh, North Carolina, and will assume charge September 1st, next. His summer engagement at Sunbury continues until August. Several weeks ago Mr. Hewitt received a call to a church about 25 miles from Raleigh but declined it. On Monday he received a letter inviting him to the largest church at Raleigh. This tribute to Mr. Hewitt is exceedingly gratifying to him and also his many warm friends in Bellefonte.

It is just barely possible that Madam Schuman-Heink, the world-famous singer, will give a one night concert in Bellefonte next January. Of course, there is nothing definite about it and probably will not be for some time to come. If Bellefonte and surrounding towns have enough music lovers willing to make up a guarantee of $1,000 Schuman-Heink will be here; otherwise she won't. Secretary Weston, of the Y. M. C. A. recently received a letter from Schuman-Heink's manager offering a one-night concert in Bellefonte in January, 1915, and stating that the guarantee would be $1,000, or $500 less than the sweet voiced singer charges per night when not appearing as a Star Course number. Dr. Weston appreciates that it is a somewhat staggering proposition, but he nevertheless is going to work to see if enough tickets can be pledged to guarantee the necessary $1,000 fund. "The Republican" gives this publicity to the matter in order that the public may have ample opportunity to consider it and if interested to pass your views along to Dr. Weston.

Minstrels A Success.

The Academy minstrels at Garman's Opera House on Thursday and Friday nights of last week proved to be the pleasing success that all friends of the school and others had anticipated. In a social way it was an event long to be remembered in the history of the famous old school. The Opera House was tastefully decorated with blue and gold, the Academy colors, and as a tribute to the present large student body of the Academy large and appreciative audiences were in attendance on both evenings. To undertake to enumerate those in the cast who featured in the storm of fun and seemingly endless array of catchy music would be to reproduce the program from top to bottom. The boys had worked faithfully and each one acquitted himself with credit. A happy and rather novel incident of the second evening entertainment was the presence on the stage of H. J. Shenk, a prominent citizen and business man of Lebanon, whose son was one of the black-faced comedians. Mr. Shenk donned a blue serge coat and white trousers and was "one of the boys." It was a pretty bit of sentiment that strongly appealed to the audience once his identity became known. The presence in town for the minstrels of the parents of a number of Academy students gave added zest to the week's social activities. The visitors included Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Shenk and daughters, Misses Beatrice and Christine, visiting with their son, Henry; Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Jones, of Reading, visiting with their sons, Richard and Paul; Mrs. William G. Fried, and daughter, Miss Martha, of Pittsburgh, visiting with her son, Edward; Miss Marjorie Allen, of Butler, who was the guest of Jack Niggle; Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Rolland, of Reading, guests of their son, Forrest; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Heim, of Reading, visiting their son, Arthur; Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Reese, and daughter, Miss Lenore, of Scranton, guests of their son, Weston; Mr. and Mrs. John P. Thomas, of Taylor, Pa., visiting with their son, William; Mrs. A. M. Breed, of Corning N. Y., guests of their son, Paul; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Berryman, and daughter, Miss Esther, of Charleroi, and Miss Paxton, of California, visiting their son, Duncan. The out-of-town guests spent several days at the Bush House.

Decorated the Graves.

Memorial Day was observed appropriately in Bellefonte, most residences and business places in town being decorated with flags and bunting and public exercises being held. The arrangements, as usual, were in the hands of G. A. R. Post, No. 95, and while the ranks are thinning out each year there still were quite a few of the Civil war veterans who turned out for the occasion. The memorial address was delivered by Rev. Dr. E. H. Vocum, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, and was a masterly effort in patriotic thought. In the early afternoon the veterans, Troop L, Third Squadron Cavalry, firemen and others paraded to the cemetery, where the graves of soldiers were decorated.

Acknowledgment is made of numerous gifts of flowers, the contributors including the following: Mahlon Foreman, William Morrison, Joseph Hughes, Russell Garbrick, William Garbrick, Roy Laird, Helen and Myrtle Beckwith, Olive and Paul Howard, Viola Miller, Hannah Tressler, Margery Wagner, Jennie Snyder, George McClelland, Paul Foreman, Henry J. A Short Talk on Buying

When you buy clothes, you do not buy cloth, buttons and thread. You buy good appearance, style, service and satisfaction. If you pay too little for your suit, one or more of these qualities must be sacrificed.

But note this—you cannot buy a Hickey-Freeman-Quality suit in which any of these points has been slighted. That is why we have no suits of this make at less than $18.00.

After all, it is not the exact amount you pay that is most important, but rather the getting of full value for each dollar spent. We guarantee value, pressed down and running over, in every Hickey-Freeman-Quality suit in our store.

Beautifully hand-tailored suits at $18.00; others with certain special features, at $20.00; still others in more expensive fabrics at $22.00, and $25.00. But at each price and all prices, you get exceptional style, expert workmanship and honest materials.

Hickey-Freeman-Quality is sold only in our store in Bellefonte.
